WHITBECK, C.J.

This case arose when respondents Ingham County (the county) and Ingham County Sheriff (the sheriff) disciplined Detective Laurie Siegrist, the division president of the charging party, Capitol Lodge No. 141 of the Fraternal Order of Police, Labor Program, Inc. (the union). The county and the sheriff charged that Detective Siegrist violated the sheriff's written work rules when, without prior authorization, she faxed to an attorney for the union an internal memorandum regarding a new policy that required all detectives to wear pagers while on and off duty. The union then filed a grievance for unfair labor practice against the county and the sheriff with the Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC). The hearing referee concluded that the county and the sheriff violated MCL 423.210(1)(a) and (c) of the public employment relations act (PERA)¹ by enforcing the rule requiring prior authorization against Detective Siegrist. MERC adopted the hearing referee's recommendation. The county and the sheriff appeal as of right that MERC order. We reverse.

I. Basic Facts And Procedural History

A. Undisputed Facts

We quote the following facts from the decision and recommended order of the hearing referee, which were adopted by MERC and are not in dispute. The findings of MERC "with respect to questions of fact if supported by competent, material, and substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive."²

Rule 106 of [the sheriff's] internal rules and regulations is entitled "Records and Information Security." It provides, in relevant part:

The Department recognizes that its Members, by virtue of their position, will gain access to sensitive and restricted information. What is learned as a Member cannot be disseminated for other than Departmental purposes and then only through approved procedures.

All information, records, software, hardware, data and related equipment used, maintained, owned, produced, licensed, or managed by the Department are the property of the Department and may not be used, copied, reproduced, released, or viewed except in accordance with Department procedures.

No Departmental documents to include, but not limited to, reports, photographs, memos, and official records shall be released to the public without authorization and in compliance with the Freedom of Information Act.

On March 11, 2003, Lieutenant Jeff Joy used Respondent's e-mail system to send the following memo to all Respondent's detectives, including Siegrist:

"Re: Pagers

"It's been brought to my attention that some of you are under the impression that you do not have to carry your department pager with you off duty. This is [sic] memo is to inform you that you are required to carry your pager with you when you are on and off duty. If you have any questions, I will be available." [Emphasis in original.]

Later that day, two detectives asked Siegrist if [the sheriff] could lawfully implement a new rule requiring them to wear pagers off duty. Siegrist told them she was not sure. Siegrist phoned [the union's] attorney, R. David Wilson. They discussed the issue, and Wilson asked her to fax him a copy of the memo.

On March 12, Wilson sent . . . Undersheriff Matthew Myers the following letter:

"The attached memorandum was just forwarded to my office by Lodge representatives for my consideration and review.

"I am informed that members of the Detective Bureau have never been required to carry their Department pager when they are off duty. Obviously, the attached memorandum changes this requirement. Aside from on-call overtime considerations, such a change constitutes a change in working conditions that requires collective bargaining before the change can be implemented. As I am sure you know, no bargaining regarding this issue has ever taken place.

"The purpose of this letter is to demand that collective bargaining proceedings regarding this issue occur before this change in working conditions is implemented." [Emphasis in original.]

On March 17, Myers sent a memo to all detectives with a copy of the [sic] Wilson's March 12 letter attached. The memo stated that an internal document authored by Lieutenant Joy was distributed to Wilson without authorization, and that this action violated Department Rule 106.

On March 20, Siegrist received a written verbal warning^[3] for violating Rule 106. The warning, which was placed in Siegrist's personnel file, stated:

"Even though you are the Union President you do not have the right to freely distribute Department memo's [sic] and/or documents. It is not for you to decide which documents are to be made public. Your union has the ability to request public documents and certainly knows the procedure for doing this. The Sheriff's Office cannot and will not tolerate employees (even those who are union representatives) freely circulating Sheriff's Office documents. Procedures are in place to release documents and those procedures must be followed." [MERC hearing referee decision and recommended order.]

B. The Hearing Referee's Conclusion

The hearing referee concluded that disciplining Detective Siegrist for giving a copy of the memorandum to the union's attorney violated PERA by infringing on Detective Siegrist's right to engage in protected "concerted activities." More specifically, the hearing referee concluded that Detective Siegrist was engaged in lawful concerted activity when she sought the union attorney's opinion regarding a condition of employment. The hearing referee acknowledged that the union was not directly challenging rule 106; she recognized that "the only issue here is whether [the sheriff] could lawfully discipline an employee for violating an otherwise legitimate work rule in the course of conduct that would otherwise be protected by PERA." Continuing her analysis, the hearing referee stated as follows:

[The Sheriff] argues that instead of giving Wilson a copy of the memo, Siegrist could have made a formal request for the document.¹ However, Siegrist testified that when she read the memo she did not know whether it constituted a violation of [the sheriff's] bargaining duty. Siegrist had a legitimate interest in discussing the memo with Wilson without [the sheriff] knowing about their discussion. Moreover, by providing Wilson with a copy of the memo, Siegrist ensured that Wilson knew exactly what [the sheriff] had told employees, so he could accurately determine whether [the sheriff] had overstepped its rights. I also conclude that [the sheriff] did not establish a legitimate and substantial business justification for applying Rule 106 to Siegrist's conduct. [The sheriff] has a legitimate interest in preventing the unauthorized disclosure of confidential information and documents to the public. However, [the sheriff] did not offer a business justification for prohibiting Siegrist, a member of the [union's] bargaining [unit], from giving Wilson, a non-employee agent of [the union], a document clearly relevant to the wages, hours, and terms and conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. Balancing [the sheriff's] general interest in protecting the confidentiality of its information against the effect of the discipline on Siegrist's ability to exercise her Section 9 rights, I conclude that [the sheriff] violated Section 10(1)(a) and (c) by disciplining Siegrist

The hearing referee recommended that MERC enter an order directing Ingham County to: (1) cease and desist from applying rule 106 in a way that "interferes, restrains or coerces employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed under Section 9 of PERA"; (2) remove the relevant written verbal warning from Detective Siegrist's personnel file; and (3) post a notice to employees regarding this matter.

C. MERC's Decision

MERC subsequently adopted the hearing referee's recommended order as its order. In its opinion, MERC concluded as follows:

No claim is made, nor is there evidence to support a claim, that Siegrist's disclosure to [the union's] attorney dealt with a confidential matter pertaining to security. The [sheriff] argues that [the union] had no right to receive the document disclosed by Siegrist. It does not dispute [the union's] right to receive the information contained in that document.

MERC declined "to hold that the [sheriff's] legitimate business interest permits it to ban disclosures that categorically include communications protected by PERA." According to MERC:

Although an employer has a legitimate business interest in preventing the unauthorized disclosure of confidential information, there has been no showing here of a business justification for prohibiting Siegrist from giving [the union's] attorney a document pertaining to a condition of employment affecting bargaining unit employees. Siegrist was engaged in lawful concerted activity within the meaning of Section 9 of PERA when she sought Wilson's opinion as to [the sheriff's] right to require, without bargaining, that bargaining unit members wear pagers while off duty. Where there is no overriding legitimate business interest in protecting the information from disclosure, rights guaranteed by PERA remain paramount.

II. PERA Violation

A. Standard Of Review

The county and the sheriff argue that MERC erred by holding that the county and the sheriff violated PERA by disciplining Detective Siegrist for disseminating the memorandum to the union's attorney. This Court reviews MERC decisions to determine whether they were "authorized by law."⁴ A MERC decision may be set aside on appeal if it is based on a "substantial and material error of law."⁵ This Court reviews de novo MERC's legal conclusions.⁶

B. Relevant Authority

The relevant statutory provisions in this case of first impression are §§ 9 and 10 of PERA. Section 9 states, in pertinent part, that "[i]t shall be lawful for public employees . . . to engage in lawful concerted activities for the purpose of collective negotiation or bargaining or other mutual aid and protection"⁷ Further, § 10 makes it "unlawful for a public employer or an officer or agent of a public employer (a) to interfere with, restrain or coerce public employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in section 9; . . . [or] (c) to discriminate in regard to hire, terms or other conditions of employment in order to encourage or discourage membership in a labor organization"⁸

⁸ MCL 423.210(1)(a) and (c).

To analyze whether an employer can lawfully apply an employment rule to discipline an employee for engaging in what would otherwise be a protected activity under § 9 of PERA, we apply a three-part test. Under the first prong of the test, we look at whether the employer's action adversely affected the employee's protected right to engage in lawful concerted activities under PERA.⁹ Under the second prong, we look at whether the employer has met its burden to demonstrate a legitimate and substantial business justification for instituting and applying the rule.¹⁰ Finally, under the third prong, we balance the diminution of the employee's rights because of application of the rule against the employer's interests that are protected by the rule.¹¹ In addressing this final prong, we must remain cognizant that "[it] is the primary responsibility of the Board and not of the courts 'to strike the proper balance between the asserted business justifications and the invasion of employee rights in light of the Act and its policy.'"¹²

C. Protected Activity

In applying the first prong of the test, MERC concluded that "Siegrist was engaged in lawful concerted activity within the meaning of Section 9 of PERA when she sought [the union attorney's] opinion as to [the sheriff's] right to require, without bargaining, that bargaining unit members wear pagers while off duty." The county and the sheriff argue that MERC erred in this conclusion because Detective Siegrist's act of giving the memorandum to the union's lawyer is not a protected activity under PERA.

"As a general proposition PERA does not proscribe breach of a collective bargaining agreement or 'unfairness'; an employee may be terminated for a 'good reason, bad reason, or no reason at all.' But an employee may not be discharged for exercising rights guaranteed by § 9 of the act."¹³ As mentioned, § 9 permits public employees "to engage in lawful concerted activities for the purpose of collective negotiation or bargaining or other mutual aid and protection" According to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, to qualify as a protected activity, "it must appear at the very least that it was engaged in with the object of initiating or inducing or preparing for group action or that it had some relation to group action in the interest of the employees."¹⁴ Further, the Michigan Supreme Court has explained that "[a]n employee may, in connection with the prosecution of a good faith grievance, employ reasonable, nonabusive, methods of obtaining information necessary to prosecute the grievance."¹⁵

The union argues that it is well established that an employer under PERA must make information that is necessary to negotiate or administer the terms of the parties' labor agreement available to the union. Thus, the union argues, the sheriff's application of rule 106 to the facts of this case constitutes an unfair labor practice because the rule unreasonably restricts the union's ability to represent its members and effectively enforce the terms of the labor agreement. We disagree. In sum, we hold that the sheriff's action did not adversely affect Detective Siegrist's protected right to engage in lawful concerted activities under PERA.

In her hearing testimony, Detective Siegrist admitted that she received a copy of the memorandum in her capacity as a sheriff's department detective, but she asserted that she released the memorandum to the union's attorney in her capacity as a union representative. The Michigan Supreme Court has recognized that subjects such as hourly rates of pay, overtime pay, layoffs, discharges, workloads, vacation and holiday pay, sick leave, pensions, no-strike clauses, profit-sharing plans, grievance procedures and arbitration, work rules, seniority and promotion, compulsory retirement age, and management-rights clauses, etc., are examples of mandatory subjects of bargaining.¹⁶ Therefore, there can be no question that Detective Siegrist's conduct of obtaining information, i.e., seeking advice from the union's attorney, appears to have been done with the object of preparing for group action in the interest of the employees.¹⁷

In holding that an employee may not be discharged for the filing of a grievance, the NLRB and the Courts of Appeals have rejected arguments that the filing of an individual grievance is not "concerted" activity for the purpose of "collective" negotiation or bargaining or other "mutual" aid and protection. They reasoned that a person who in good faith asserts an individual grievance based on a provision of a collective bargaining agreement should be protected because "the collective bargaining agreement is the result of concerted activities by the employees for their mutual aid and protection." [Id., quoting Nat'l Labor Relations Bd v Selwyn Shoe Mfg Corp, 428 F2d 217, 221 (CA 8, 1970).]

However, Detective Siegrist admits that she was aware of rule 106 at the time she faxed the memorandum to the union's attorney. Indeed, the record reflects that Detective Siegrist has requested and received internal sheriff's department documents on numerous occasions, and the sheriff has never denied even one of Detective Siegrist's requests for internal documents. Further, there is no question that Detective Siegrist did not request or receive authorization to release the memorandum at issue. And the county and the sheriff have never asserted that if Detective Siegrist had made a proper request, such request would have been denied. Thus, there can be no reasonable argument that the sheriff acted contrary to its obligation to make information available.

Moreover, as the county and the sheriff point out, in the event that Detective Siegrist made a proper request under the work rules and such request was denied, PERA and the Michigan Freedom of Information Act (FOIA)¹⁸ provide appropriate avenues for resolution of disputes regarding disclosure of a public sector employer's documents. A public employer's failure to comply with a union's request for the release of nonprotected information constitutes an unfair labor practice under PERA, as interpreted and enforced by MERC.¹⁹ Further, FOIA requires the full disclosure of public records, subject only to narrowly construed exemptions.²⁰ Thus, we cannot conclude that the sheriff's application of rule 106 constitutes an unfair labor practice because application of the rule does not unreasonably restrict the union's ability to represent its members and effectively enforce the terms of the labor agreement. That is, while rule 106 may make union activity slightly less convenient, the rule does not inhibit protected activity.²¹ There is no evidence that the employees' organizing efforts would have been stymied by having to follow the proper procedures for gaining authorization to release the memorandum to the union.²²

The union also contends that, simply because Detective Siegrist was acting as a union representative, her activities fell under the protection of PERA. According to this Court, however, "[m]isconduct in the course of concerted activity . . . is not beyond an employer's right to discipline."²³ This Court explained: ""When a union steward is disciplined for violating job rules and not because of his position as a union official, the steward cannot look to his union status for protection."²⁴ Further, in Texas Instruments, supra, the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit stated that employees who act under § 7 of the NLRA are not always shielded from discipline when they violate an employer's internal rules.²⁵ "For example, concerted activity that violates state or federal law, that irresponsibly exposes an employer's property to possible damage or that constitutes insubordination or disloyalty may be found to fall outside the scope of the NLRA even if undertaken in the interest of self-organization or collective bargaining."²⁶ The First Circuit stated that "employees are entitled to use for self-organizational purposes information and knowledge which comes to their attention in the normal course of work activity and association but are not entitled to their Employer's private or confidential records."²⁷

We acknowledge that this case differs from Texas Instruments in that the memorandum was sent to all the detectives, including Detective Siegrist, in the normal course of their work activity. However, this case is not about an employee's right to speak freely with or obtain advice from a union. It is important to keep in mind that Detective Siegrist was not disciplined for disclosing information or seeking advice from her union attorney; that is, she was not disciplined for simply using information and knowledge that came to her attention in the normal course of work activity. She was disciplined for violating the employment rules by releasing an internal document to a person outside the sheriff's department without prior approval.

Further, this case differs from Texas Instruments because the memorandum in this case was not labeled as confidential nor would the information contained in the memorandum have led Detective Siegrist to believe that the information was necessarily of a sensitive nature. However, we hold that any internal documents produced by the sheriff's department, and circulated internally only, are deemed confidential by simple virtue of the sheriff's work rule prohibiting release of any internal documents without prior authorization. Because Detective Siegrist was disciplined for violating job rules and not because of her position as a union official, she cannot rely on her union status for protection.

The union also argues that rule 106 is inapplicable to the circumstances of this case because Detective Siegrist did not disseminate the memorandum to "the public." That is, according to the union, its attorney is not a member of "the public" for purposes of applying rule 106 in light of his relationship to the union and to the employer by virtue of the union's collective bargaining agreement. However, an employer's disclosure obligation is mandatory unless the information requested is confidential "or readily accessible to the public and thus to the union"²⁸ The union and its counsel are members of "the public" to the extent that they are not employees of the sheriff's department.

Accordingly, we hold that the sheriff was entitled to discipline Detective Siegrist for failing to obtain prior approval before releasing internal documents to persons outside the sheriff's office, even if the alleged rationale for the release was to engage in a union activity. Detective Siegrist's dissemination of an internal document without permission was a punishable offense regardless of whether Detective Siegrist was involved in a union activity at the time.

D. Legitimate and Substantial Business Justification

Even assuming that the sheriff's action adversely affected Detective Siegrist's protected right to engage in lawful concerted activities under PERA, we conclude that the county and the sheriff demonstrated a legitimate and substantial business justification for instituting the rule and applying it in these circumstances.

As in Texas Instruments, this case involves an employer's substantial security interest in making sure that employees do not disseminate confidential information because of the sensitive nature of their work. The sheriff's department is a paramilitary organization. Police departments, like defense contractors, have a substantial interest in keeping certain sensitive information confidential, and they are justified in having rules that protect the confidentiality of documents.

The union argues that the content of the memorandum is not sensitive or confidential, noting that the sheriff did not label it as a confidential document. The union stresses that the memorandum clearly and directly addressed a simple and routine working condition. Further, the union points out that Undersheriff Myers admitted in his hearing testimony that the content of the memorandum did not contain confidential or restricted information that would compromise the internal operations of the sheriff's department.

We acknowledge that the release of a memorandum pertaining to wearing a pager off duty does not conceivably prejudice the sheriff's ability to protect the public. However, the union's arguments miss the point. The memorandum's content is irrelevant. What is relevant is the sheriff's interest in ensuring uniformity in disclosure of potentially sensitive internal documentation. And it is the employer, not the employee, who is in the position to assess the propriety of releasing internal documentation.

MERC and the union appear to believe that a substantial and legitimate business justification will exist only when it is established, after the fact, that an employee's disclosure of internal documents has caused harm. However, the fact that the particular document released in this case may arguably be devoid of sensitive or confidential information does not alter the fact that Detective Siegrist violated department rules in releasing the document to an outside party without any opportunity for the sheriff's oversight of its dissemination. A law enforcement agency must be able to control the distribution of its internal documents to maintain its effective operation. As the county and the sheriff point out, allowing members of a law enforcement organization to release internal documents without authorization in the hopes that they can later justify their actions by invoking their rights to engage in union activity would impermissibly threaten public safety, officer safety, and jail security. Once the information is released, the bell has been rung and the damage suffered may be grave. Given these risks, we cannot expect the sheriff to assess its employee's conduct in hindsight. Employees cannot be expected to discern which types of documents are acceptable for release and which are not—that is the sheriff's job to execute with the benefit of foresight on how the release of such information will bear on the sensitive interworkings of the law enforcement agency.

Again addressing the union's argument that it is not a member of "the public," we find that the sheriff's interest in preserving the security of its internal communications prohibits an employee from releasing internal documents even to a union's attorney where the documents are protected under the rule of confidentiality. The union is under no legal compulsion to keep sheriff's department information out of the public's hands, and the document could later become public through the litigation of a labor dispute and could compromise the sheriff's sensitive procedures or other information appropriately kept confidential.

We last note that we are fully cognizant of the obvious shortcoming of rule 106: that it does not preclude an employee from verbally communicating, even verbatim, the contents of any internal document to members of the public. However, we reiterate that it is not our place, in this case, to question the validity or logic of rule 106; we are merely approving application of the rule, which we must presume valid, under the present set of circumstances.

The sheriff has a paramount interest in ensuring that its internal documents are not released without authorization. Thus, even assuming that Detective Siegrist's release of the memorandum was a protected activity under PERA, the sheriff had a legitimate business interest justification for restricting unauthorized dissemination of its internal documents. Thus, we conclude that the county and the sheriff's interest in keeping all internal documents out of the public forum absent department authorization for release outweighs Detective Siegrist's right to engage in protected activity under PERA.

E. Constitutional Issues

The union claims that to force Detective Siegrist to file under FOIA for the release of the memorandum would deprive her of the fundamental right to due process and would impinge on her First Amendment right to freedom of speech. However, the union cites no legal authority and provides no reasoning to support either of these claims. Thus, the union has effectively abandoned its due process argument by failing to meaningfully argue its merits.²⁹

III. Conclusion

We recognize that "[it] is the primary responsibility of the Board and not of the courts "to strike the proper balance between the asserted business justifications and the invasion of employee rights in light of the Act and its policy.""³⁰ However, in reviewing MERC's decision de novo, we conclude that MERC erred in its legal conclusions that the county and the sheriff adversely affected Detective Siegrist's right to engage in lawful concerted activity and that the county and the sheriff failed to establish a legitimate and substantial business justification for applying the rule to Detective Siegrist's conduct. We conclude that Detective Siegrist's right to engage in lawful concerted activity was not adversely affected when she knowingly violated a work rule that the sheriff created and enforced with the legitimate and substantial business justification of protecting the sensitive interworkings of the law enforcement agency.
